MESSAGGIO DEL SANTO PADRE AL PATRIARCA ECUMENICO BARTOLOMEO I

Il Santo Padre ha indirizzato un Messaggio al Patriarca Ecumenico Bartolomeo I, in occasione del V Simposio sull'ambiente, che si è svolto in navigazione lungo il Mar Baltico, ed è stato dedicato al tema: «Il Mare Baltico, un'eredità comune, una responsabilità condivisa».

Il Messaggio del Papa Giovanni Paolo II è stato consegnato al Patriarca dall'Em.mo Card Walter Kasper, Presidente del Pontificio Consiglio per la Promozione dell'Unità dei Cristiani, il quale è intervenuto all'inaugurazione ufficiale del Simposio, il 2 giugno corrente, a Gdansk, in Polonia.

Il Simposio, promosso dal Patriarca Ecumenico nell'ambito del Progetto «religione, scienza ed ambiente», che ha come scopo di suscitare un movimento concorde per la salvaguardia del creato, si è ispirato, per i contenuti, alle precedenti edizioni dedicate al Mare Egeo, al Mar Nero, al Danubio e al Mare Adriatico.

All'evento ha partecipato anche l'Em.mo Card. Roger Etchegaray, Presidente emerito del Pontificio Consiglio della Giustizia e della Pace, Membro del Comitato d'onore della manifestazione. L'Em.mo Card. Edward Idris Cassidy ha preso parte alla plenaria del Simposio, svoltasi a Stoccolma.

Nella scorsa edizione del Simposio, dedicata al Mare Adriatico, il Santo Padre ed il Patriarca Ecumenico avevano firmato una Dichiarazione comune sulla salvaguardia del creato, della quale hanno preso atto i partecipanti al Convegno in oggetto.

Pubblichiamo di seguito il Messaggio del Santo Padre al Patriarca Ecumenico Bartolomeo I:

To His Holiness Bartholomaios I
Archbishop of Constantinople
Ecumenical Patriarch

It gives me great pleasure to greet you and all those taking part in the Fifth Symposium of the Religion, Science and the Environment project which this year devotes its attention to the subject: «The Baltic Sea: a Common Heritage, a Shared Responsibility». As the convention opens, it is a particular joy for me to know that you have gathered in my homeland of Poland, in the city of Gdansk. Through the presence of Cardinal Walter Kasper, President of the Pontifical Council for Promoting Christian Unity, I wish to renew my solidarity with the objectives of the project and to assure you of my fervent support for the success of your meeting.

On a number of occasions I have commented on the growing awareness among individuals, and indeed the entire international community, of the need to respect the environment and the natural resources which God has given humanity. Your current symposium attests to the desire to transform that growing awareness into policies and acts of authentic stewardship. I shall follow with interest your endeavours to realize the aims outlined in our Common Declaration of last year.

It is imperative however that the true nature of the ecological crisis be understood. The relationship between individuals or communities and the environment can never be detached from their relationship with God. When man «turns his back on the Creator's plan, he provokes a disorder which has inevitable repercussions on the rest of the created order» (Message for the 1990 World Day of Peace, 5). Ecological irresponsibility is at heart a moral problem - founded upon an anthropological error - which arises when man forgets that his ability to transform the world must always respect God's design of creation (cf. Centesimus Annus, 37).

Precisely because of the essentially moral nature of the problems which the Symposium is addressing, it is proper that religious, civic and political leaders, alongside expert representatives of the scientific community, confront the environmental challenges facing the Baltic region. That the Symposium is taking place aboard a boat which will sail to many of the port towns on the Baltic Sea is itself a powerful reminder that the effects of ecological irresponsibility often transcend the borders of individual nations. Similarly, solutions to this problem will necessarily involve acts of solidarity which transcend political divisions or unnecessarily narrow industrial self-interests.

Your Holiness, in the Common Declaration on Environmental Ethics which we signed on 10 June last year regarding the safekeeping of creation, we outlined a specifically Christian interpretation of the difficulties which the ecological crisis presents. Christians must always be ready to assume in unison their responsibility within the divine design for creation, a responsibility which leads to a vast field of ecumenical and interreligious cooperation. As we stated, a solution to ecological challenges demands more than just economic and technological proposals. It requires an inner change of heart which leads to the rejection of unsustainable patterns of consumption and production. It demands an ethical behaviour which respects the principles of universal solidarity, social justice and responsibility. As you yourself stated at the closing of the Fourth International Environmental Symposium in Venice, this calls for genuine sacrifice: «when we sacrifice our life and share our wealth, we gain life in abundance and enrich the entire world».

Your Holiness, I wish to express my encouragement for your commitment to lead the symposium of the Religion, Science and the Environment project. I pray that Almighty God will abundantly bless this initiative. May he accompany you and your collaborators and guide you in the ways of justice, so that all creation may give praise to God (cf. Ps 148).
